VIII: NADHMI AUCHI

Nadhmi Auchi is a British citizen of Iraqi origin. He was convicted of fraud in France in 2003 for his involvement in the Elf Aquitaine scandal. Martin Bright of the British magazine New Statesman wrote a blog post drawing attention to Mr Auchi's use of litigation, or the threat of litigation, to remove newspaper articles that were critical of him from Internet archives. The New Statesman itself then received a letter from Auchi's lawyers, and Bright censored his own blog post.

WikiLeaks published the original post and the censored version. Both can be seen at:
