Garhwal Rifles (three battalions); the Kumaon Regiment (three battalions); the Assam Regiment (three battalions); the Bihar Regiment (three battalions); the Sikh Light Infantry (three battalions); the Mahar Regiment (three battalions); and six regiments of Gorkha Rifles (17 battalions).

A similar division and exchange of squadrons was carried out in the case of the Armoured Corps, with 12 regiments – Skinner's Horse (1st Duke of York's Own), 2nd Royal Lancers (Gardner's Horse), 3rd Cavalry, Hodson's Horse (4th Duke of Cambridge's Own Lancers), 7th Light Cavalry, 8th King George V's Own Light Cavalry, the Royal Deccan Horse (9th Horse), the Scinde Horse (14th Prince of Wales's Own Cavalry), 16th Light Cavalry, the Poona Horse (17th Queen Victoria's Own Cavalry), 18th King Edward VII's Own Cavalry and the Central India Horse (21st King George V's Own Horse) – retained by India and six transferred to the Pakistan Army. The majority of these regiments were equipped with M3 Stuart light tanks; three regiments (3 CAVALRY, 9 HORSE and 14 HORSE) had Sherman medium tanks and one (1 HORSE) was equipped with Churchill infantry tanks, while two (2 LANCERS and 17 HORSE) were equipped with Humber and Daimler armoured cars.

The Royal Regiment of Indian Artillery was divided in 1947, with India retaining 18½ artillery regiments – nine field, two mountain, four anti-tank, one medium, two anti-aircraft and one survey regiment (two batteries only). Towed 25-pdr guns were retained by the majority of the field regiments, with two being equipped with 25-pdr-armed Sexton self-propelled guns. India had stocks of both the 75mm M1 pack howitzer, assigned to 9 Parachute Field Regiment, and the QF 3.7in mountain howitzer, assigned to the two mountain regiments. The anti-tank regiments were equipped with 6-pdr guns while the medium regiment was equipped with the BL 5.5in medium gun; the anti-aircraft regiments retained the 40mm Bofors guns used in World War II.

The Royal Indian Engineers, organized into three groups – Queen Victoria's Own Madras Group, King George's Own Bengal Group and the Royal Bombay Group – saw roughly one-quarter of their personnel assigned to Pakistan.
