casualties, Indian troops reached Bidar on 17 September, securing the airfield by the afternoon. The Eastern Strike Force succeeded in confusing the enemy about the direction of the main Indian attack. In addition, two more thrusts, from the south and the north, were launched. Caught between these pincers, the Hyderabadi troops and Razakars did not put up any fight and deserted en masse. The Hyderabad forces surrendered on 18 September, bringing an end to the 100-hour-long operation. The second of three princely states was now a part of the Union of India.
