

Indian Army and Pakistan Army officers confer with members of the UN Military Observation Group in Kashmir, 1955. The UN Military observation Group was established in 1949 to supervise the Ceasefire Line established in Jammu & Kashmir. Since 1972, India has maintained that the group's role has been overtaken by the Simla Agreement between India and Pakistan that led to the delimitation of the Line of Control and the agreement to resolve disputes bilaterally, without the intervention of a third party. (Photo12/Universal Images Group via Getty Images)