5 August 1965. The Indian Army had defeated Pakistan’s ambitions to capture Kashmir and in the process had destroyed more tanks, captured more territory and lost fewer men than its opponent. After the 1962 debacle, this was almost redemption for the Indian Army, but it was not the end of Pakistani misadventures as war would reignite just six years later.

General Jayanto Nath Chaudhuri, Chief of the Army Staff, talks to Brigadier Niranjan Singh, commander of 54 Infantry Brigade, on the bank of the Ichhogil Canal near Lahore, 23 September 1965. On 21 September the brigade’s 3 JAT, led by Lieutenant Colonel Desmond Hayes, captured Dograi on the Amritsar–Lahore axis, in a major coup for the Indian Army.
