

A soldier of 4 Infantry Division stands guard in Delhi, 16 September 1947. As Partition triggered waves of mass migrations to and from the newly formed Pakistan, the Indian Army was called in to stop communal clashes, ensure the safety of migrants in transit by train or road and build relief camps for refugees wherever possible. It was instrumental in establishing refugee camps in Punjab and Delhi. One of the tasks entrusted to the Army was also the security of property belonging to the minority communities. (Keystone/Getty Images)