On 1 June, 2 RAJ RIF moved to Dras from Jammu & Kashmir and entered the launch area prepared by 18 GRENADIERS for the attack on Tololing. On 12 June, 2 RAJ RIF launched a fresh attack on Tololing Top, supported by artillery. The all-night operation left 11 men dead and over 50 wounded. Thereafter 13 JAK RIF relieved 2 RAJ RIF and consolidated Tololing's capture by taking surrounding heights including Point 5140.

By mid-June, the Indian Army artillery was strengthened, with over 150 guns across the three sectors, including the formidable 155mm FH-77B towed howitzers. By the end of June, there were over 200 guns available, plus 120mm GRAD and 122mm Pinaka multi-barrel rocket launcher systems. After Tololing, the focus shifted to Point 4875 in the Mushkoh area and Tiger Hill. On the morning of 3 July, 13 JAK RIF captured Point 4875 after a punishing climb and brutal close combat. Captain Vikram Batra, who had led the assault on Point 5140, was killed in action by Pakistani artillery fire and was posthumously awarded the Param Vir Chakra ('Wheel of the Ultimate Brave'), India's highest gallantry award. A day after the attack on Point 4875, 18 GRENADIERS conducted a successful assault on Tiger Hill with 8 SIKH in support. By 8 July, the entire Tiger Hill complex had been captured. On 9 July, Pakistan commenced ceasefire negotiations, with its forces disengaging from the area on 11 July. Operation Vijay was declared a success on 14 July, but it was only on 26 July that the Indian Army announced the complete withdrawal of Pakistani irregular and regular forces.

The Indian Army's 5.56mm INSAS assault rifle. (Saurabh212/Wikimedia/CC BY-SA 4.0)