the Congress thought that the Jan Sangh was communal, the Jan Sangh accused its rival of minority appeasement. In the Jan Sangh's eyes, as Deendayal Upadhyaya, then the party's general secretary, would say in 1962, the alignment of Muslim communalists, the grant of Congress tickets to 'notorious pro-Pakistanis' and the appeasement by the Congress of Muslim separatism and collaboration posed a threat to the country.[60]

Fundamentally, for the Jan Sangh, the India–Pakistan problem was really only an extension of the Hindu–Muslim question before Partition. Future prime minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee summed this up in 1973, while introducing a compendium on Sangh policies:[61]

At the time the Jana Sangh was born, the country was enmeshed in problems arising out of partition. Congress hopes that the creation of a separate Pakistan would put an end to an agonising chapter of communal violence and animosity had been falsified. The Hindu-Muslim conflict had only become enlarged into an Indo-Pak confrontation. Pakistan's aggression in Jammu-Kashmir State continued. In East Pakistan (now Bangladesh), Hindus were being decimated in a systematic manner. There was widespread discontent in the public mind regarding the Government's Pak-policy which in effect was only an extension of Congress' Muslim-appeasement policy.

These are the psychological wellsprings of the BJP's promulgation of the CAA, which remained as valid in 2020 as they were in 1973. This is precisely why, when faced with opposition to the Bill, the Modi government doubled down on it, rather than backing off.

Early Echoes of CAA, Article 370 and the Hindu Question: From the Jan Sangh's Day 1

CAA and the Unfinished Agenda of Partition: The 1950s Debate on Hindu Refugees