But the poll dynamic may be far more complicated than that. This is best shown by the Reserve Bank of India's (RBI) periodic consumer-confidence surveys, conducted in dozens of cities. One of the metrics on which responses were collected was on what people thought their own employment prospects had been in the twelve months prior to the survey. The results how that their expectation had risen sharply just after the Modi government came to power in 2014, but collapsed horribly after demonetisation.
