

Khurram was away from the court much of the time. Still he managed to learn of plots against him in Agra.

One of his father's wives had a son that she favored. She tried to get Jahangir to make her son the heir to the throne. Khurram felt that his father was too weak to resist her. So Khurram started a rebellion against his father's rule. It was unsuccessful. Even so, Khurram was able to gain his father's forgiveness—on two conditions. Khurram and Mumtaz were sent away to live in exile. And they also had to leave two of their sons behind as hostages.
