

In December 1631, Shah Jahan ordered one of his sons to bring the body of Mumtaz back to Agra. The prince did as his father wished. He led a parade of elephants, carrying his mother’s body in a golden coffin. All along the way, coins and food were given out to people in need. These gifts were in memory of Mumtaz, who had always shown concern for the poor.

