

However, the days of the Company’s power were coming to an end. The British government took over the Company and what it owned. Queen Victoria of England took the title Empress of India. In 1912, Delhi (formerly Shahjahanabad) became the capital of British-ruled India.