

Queen Victoria

During this time, the British tried to show they were good rulers by restoring some of India’s monuments. The Taj was one. The British, however, were fond of lawns. They planted grass in the gardens where flowers and fruit trees once grew. This was not the paradise that Shah Jahan had envisioned.