

The money was badly needed. By the end of the 1900s, parts of the Taj Mahal were starting to look rundown. Agra was now a large industrial city. Factories poured out smoke and dirt particles. They were discoloring the white marble of the Taj Mahal. As in many countries, greater use of automobiles caused pollution. Adding to the problem were fires made from charcoal and dung that poor people in the area still used to cook their food.