

In 1999, India went to war with the neighboring country of Pakistan. Would the Taj Mahal become a target of the enemy? Two years later, to protect the monument, local tailors sewed a massive black camouflage net and draped it over the building. This hid the Taj Mahal from enemy bombers. Though the Taj Mahal was not actually attacked, the effort to save it showed how devoted Indians are to their most famous building.