Buddhism became a major religion that spread into Tibet in the seventh century AD.

In Tibetan Buddhism, lamas are important teachers who guide people toward enlightenment. There are between ten and twenty million Tibetan Buddhists in the world today.

Once Lhamo could walk, he followed his mother around the farm as she did her chores. He held the bowl as she milked the dzomos (say: ZHO-mohs)—animals that are a cross between yaks and cows. Little Lhamo was playful. When his mother carried him on her shoulders, he pulled at her ears to show her which way to go. When she sent him to gather eggs from the chickens, she discovered him clucking and sitting with the hens in their nests.

The Tsering family farm also had yaks, sheep, goats, and horses. Lhamo's father especially loved the horses. But he was often angry and harsh with his children. Lhamo's mother, on the other hand, was gentle and