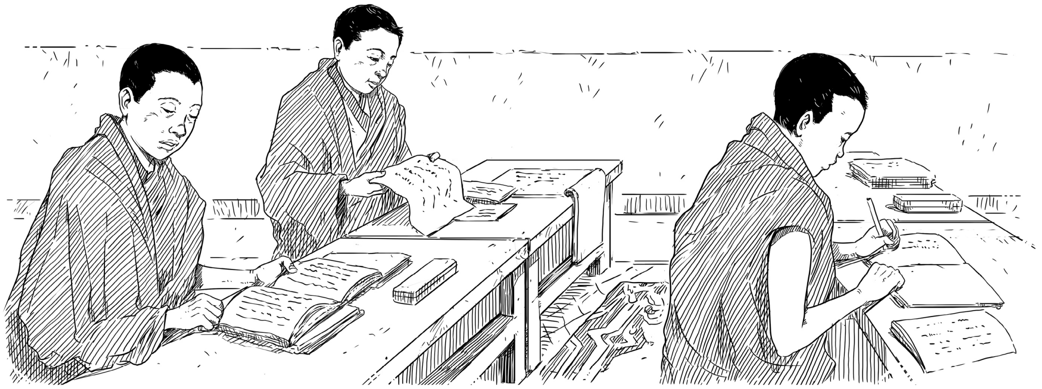
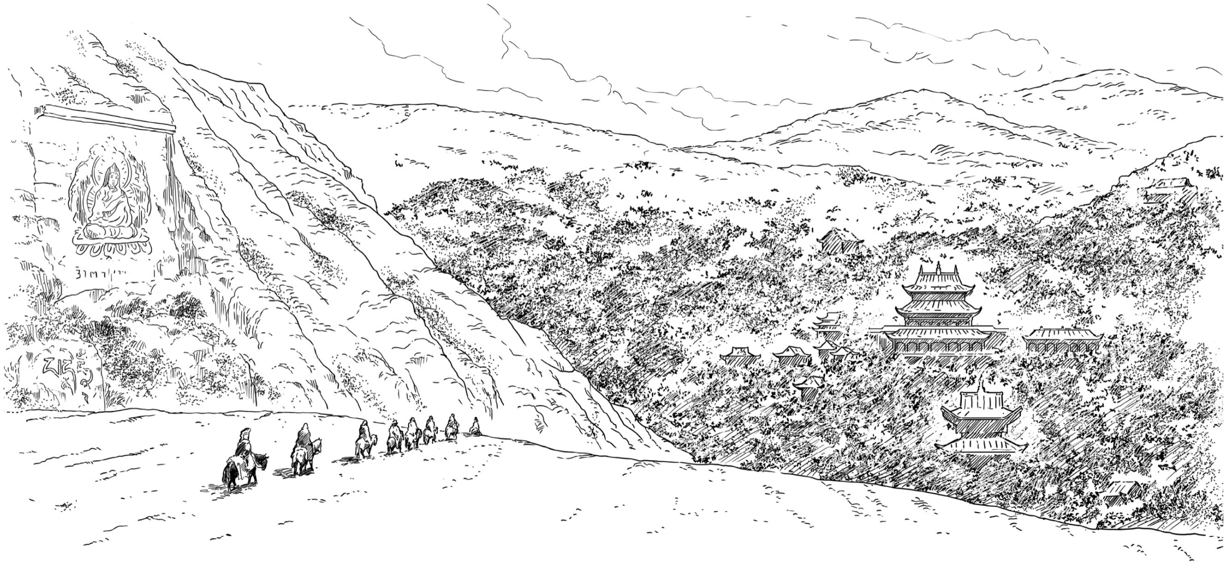
living simply and serving others at the monastery and in their communities for the rest of their lives.



After a few months, the men from Lhasa reached Amdo and were pleased with what they saw. The monastery in Amdo had three floors and a blue-and-gold roof, just like in the vision! They spent some time there, making a list of possible boys that might be the next Dalai Lama. They interviewed and tested many children on the list, but they all failed. There was only one name left.



The search party set out from the monastery, following a road to a small house that also matched the one Reting Rinpoche had described in his vision. They were hoping that the Thirteenth Dalai Lama's soul had been reborn into the young boy who lived inside. It was Lhamo's house.