

nothing extraordinary. It was as if I was looking at things I was accustomed to."

The visitors finally told Lhamo's parents that they were, in fact, searching for the Fourteenth Dalai Lama. If their son was chosen, it would be a huge honor for Lhamo's family. The holy men said that they were considering a few boys. But really, they had already decided that Lhamo was the reborn leader of Tibet.

When the search party left the next morning, Lhamo cried. He wanted to go with them! But Lhamo was still too young. He needed to stay with his family. Only a few years later, after Lhamo had turned four years old, was he ready to leave for Lhasa.
