

As their procession entered the city on October 8, 1939, crowds gathered. It was hard for them to even get through the streets! The Tibetans held sticks of sweet-smelling incense and held out white scarves to show their respect. Some people cried with happiness. The last Dalai Lama had died almost six years earlier, and they were filled with joy at the sight of this little boy who would be their next religious and political leader.