day, listening to the prayers, watching dancers, and enjoying the ceremonies. Then they feasted—and the young Dalai Lama was served first.

At the end of the day, he was led to his rooms at the Potala Palace. Such a little boy needed rest for the many busy days ahead. Now that it was official, he also needed to be trained to take on his role as the Fourteenth Dalai Lama.