The tutors felt that the Dalai Lama was a good student. But the young boy often wished he could be playing instead of studying. He and Lobsang liked to explore all the rooms in the palace. They were filled with priceless gold and silver objects, painted scrolls, books, shoes, swords, weapons, and armor. The Dalai Lama especially liked tinkering with music boxes and clocks to see how they worked. He would take them apart and put them back together again.

