CHAPTER 6
Escape to India

The morning of March 17, 1959, was much quieter than usual. Instead of clanging bells in the monasteries, the Tibetans in Lhasa were preparing for a battle. They hung anti-Chinese signs on the walls, covered up their windows, and handed out weapons to groups throughout the city. A crowd still surrounded the Norbulingka Palace to protect their leader.