

The journey took two weeks with many obstacles along the way. The Tibetans had to cross the wide Tsangpo River and high mountain passes. The horses trudged over fresh snow, slippery ice, and thick mud. The weather often changed from bright sunlight to snowy blizzards, rainy downpours to swirling dust storms. The men’s mustaches froze. They got frostbite. They even had to worry about wild wolves and bears. And they were always afraid that the Chinese would track them down.