Prime Minister Nehru allowed the Dalai Lama and his people to settle in the misty hillside town of Dharamsala in northern India. The Dalai Lama thought it looked beautiful. It had more trees and rain than he had ever seen! “I was both happy and sad,” he said about arriving in India. India had offered them a safe place to live. But he had left so many of his people behind.

