Three Main Commitments

His Holiness, the Dalai Lama, feels very strongly about three main ideas and has pledged his life to following them. In his visits and speeches, he encourages others to do the same.

They are called his Three Main Commitments:

1. He believes that all human beings want the same things—to not suffer and to find happiness. He wants people to be compassionate, understanding, and forgiving.
2. He believes that people of different religions should respect one another's beliefs and traditions and work together peacefully.
3. He believes in protecting the lessons of Tibetan Buddhism and its message of peace and nonviolence.

The Tibetian symbol of peace