

The Dalai Lama has also said that he is not sure if his soul will be reborn into a new body after he dies. When he turns ninety, he will meet with religious leaders and Tibetans to decide if he should return. He will leave clear instructions for the search parties to identify his soul within the next young Tibetan.

Since the Dalai Lama turned eighty, he still has a lot of energy and continues to travel. When he is home in Dharamsala, India, he wakes up at three o’clock in the morning and goes to bed at seven o’clock each night. He spends more than six hours a day praying and meditating.