

But this loyalty did not pay off. The British government continued to limit Indians' rights.

Gandhi found other ways to pull the Indian community of South Africa together. In 1903, he started work on a weekly journal called the Indian Opinion . He wrote articles about what was happening in the government. He shared ideas for ways to treat sickness with natural medicines. He also wrote about the benefits of a vegetarian diet.

In South Africa, Gandhi developed his philosophy of life. He called it satyagraha -from the words satya (truth) and agraha (force). "Truth force" became the weapon he used against the unfair treatment of the Indian population. Satyagraha included ideas about noncooperation, nonviolence, and nonpossession.
