

Gandhi went right back to work uniting India. This time, he focused his attention on the split between the Hindus and Muslims. These two religious groups had a long history of disagreement in India. They often fought violently with each other over differences in the religious beliefs. Gandhi used another of his peaceful weapons-fasting-to try to get Hindus and Muslims to listen to each other. In September 1924, he stopped eating and started a three-week fast. He only drank water. He grew weaker and weaker. The Hindus and Muslims decided to put aside their differences so he would break his fast and begin eating again. They did not want Gandhi to suffer
