

Gandhi traveled to London with his son Devdas and a few other supporters. While in London, Gandhi did not want to stay at a fancy hotel. Instead he was a guest at a friend’s house, and spent his days walking in the slums, talking with the poor people of London. While other political leaders wore suits, he wore his khadi and sandals. He even had tea with King George V and Queen Mary of England in his simple clothing.