of Thoughts he describes how, though the Christians seemed 'quite harmless'[30] at a glance, with their missions, schools, and colleges, they were part of something more sinister. 'So long as the Christians here indulge in such activities and consider themselves as agents of the international movement for the spread of Christianity and refuse to offer their first loyalty to the land of their birth and behave as true children of the heritage and culture of their ancestors, they will remain here as hostiles and will have to be treated as such.'[31]

On the issue of these minorities, Bunch of Thoughts goes further than his earlier writings:

> 'We, in the Sangh, are Hindus to the core. That's why we have respect for all faiths and religious beliefs…. But the question before us now is, what is the attitude of those people who have been converted to Islam or Christianity? They are born in this land, no doubt. But are they true to its salt? Are they grateful towards this land which has brought them up? Do they feel that they are the children of this land and its tradition and that to serve it is their great good fortune? Do they feel it a duty to serve her? No! Together with the change in their faith, gone are the spirit of love and devotion for the nation.'[32]

These are sweeping generalisations that admit of no exception in Golwalkar's thinking:

> 'Whatever we believed in, the Muslim was wholly hostile to it. If we worship in the temple, he would desecrate it. If we carry on bhajan*s* and car festivals, that would irritate him. If we worship [the] cow, he would like to eat it. If we glorify woman as a symbol of sacred motherhood, he would like to molest her.'

In a December 1947 speech, four months after Partition, Golwalkar, referring to Muslims, said that 'no power on earth' could keep Muslims in Hindustan. 'They should have to quit this country… If they were made to stay here the responsibility would be the Government's and the Hindu community would not be responsible. Mahatma Gandhi could not mislead them any longer. We have the means whereby [our] opponents could be immediately silenced'.[33]

Golwakar's alternative answer to this problem lay in reconversion. 'It is our duty,' Golwalkar offers, 'to call these our forlorn brothers, suffering under religious slavery for centuries, back to their ancestral home. As honest freedom-loving men, let them overthrow all signs of slavery and domination and follow the ancestral ways of devotion and national life'.[34] As Manu S. Pillai acidly observes, 'In other words, there
