wil never again be directed by muscle or money power. In fact, both these powers wil depend on technological excel ence. Technology respects only technology. And, as I said in the beginning, technology, unlike science, is a group activity. It does not grow only through individual intel igence, but by intel igences interacting and ceaselessly individual intel igence, but by intel igences interacting and ceaselessly strong Indian family which also makes missile systems. There has been much speculation and philosophizing about the life and times of our scientists, but not enough exploration in determining where they wanted to go and how they reached there. In sharing with you the story of my struggle to become a person, I have perhaps given you some insight into this journey. I hope it wil help at least a few young people to stand up to the authoritarianism in our society.

A characteristic feature of this social