* Gandhi wrote the chapters in Gujarati. The translation was mainly the work of Gandhi's then personal secretary, Mahadev Desai, who translated the first twenty-eight chapters before political duties called him away; the remaining fourteen chapters were translated by Pyarelal Nayar. The English version was read and corrected by Miraben (Madelaine Slade). The current translation was revised in 1940 by Mahadev Desai, with the assistance of the British anthropologist, Verrier Elwin, who insisted on anonymity. On this point, see Ramachandra Guha, Savaging the Civilized: Verrier Elwin, his Tribals, and India (Chicago, 1999), pp. 143–4.
