I would like to thank Penguin Random House India and my commissioning editor Gurveen Chadha for believing in our work and being patient with us while we wrote the book. Gurveen's relentless efforts have helped this book take better shape than how we had written it.

I would like to thank my co-author, Kirandeep Singh, for being by my side in all our literary endeavours.

I sincerely thank Lieutenant Colonel Abhishek for connecting me to Gunjan Ma'am. I would also like to thank my commanding officers Colonel Yogesh, Lieutenant Colonel Saikat, Lieutenant Colonel Rajendra and Colonel K.J., along with all my fellow officers and course mates, for supporting my passion for writing.* I thank Gauravjit for going out of the way to help me during the final stage of writing this book.

Lastly, I would like to thank my Nani, Didi and Jiju, my parents, Aarushi, Rohan, and my fur babies Scooby and Sultan for their unconditional support and love.

Kargil—the name itself takes me back to the days I used to listen to the news about India's war against infiltrators. Casualties were reported every day and many young officers sacrificed their lives for the nation. Captain Sourabh Kalia and Captain Vikram Batra's faces are still etched in my mind. Many documentaries and films have been made on the Kargil War but I, as a writer, always wanted to contribute to the cause of glorifying the deeds of these bravehearts in writing. This motivated me to co-write the autobiography of Flight Lieutenant Gunjan Saxena (retd)—'The Kargil Girl'. I am thankful to her for trusting us to give words to her story.

I couldn't have dreamt about writing this book if my co-author, Nirvan, hadn't been there with me.

I thank Suhail Mathur of The Book Bakers and Penguin Random House India for giving us this opportunity.

My sincere thanks to all my family members, especially Jiwan Jyoti Phul and Pavitdeep Singh Phul, my friends Gursahib Singh, Bhupinder Singh,
