Personality clashes are bound to happen, I suppose. Everybody can't always get on with everyone else.

Anyway, back to the fart in Montego Bay. Daryll and Roger were having a proper go at each other – we're talking a nose-to-nose altercation here. (Ironic, now that I think about it, given that Roger was the source of the smell to which Daryll was taking such great exception.) Roger ended up shoving Daryll, and the floor was covered in really slippery tiles, so Daryll went flying into some chairs. Not good. By now he was apoplectic with rage and stormed out of the changing room, shouting, 'That's it! Fuck this! I'm not going back on the field.' And he went straight to Goolam.

Goolam Rajah was, and still is, the Proteas' much-respected team manager. So Daryll stormed back to the hotel, which meant I had to go and field. 'Cool,' I thought. 'This is better than being twelfth man.'

What wasn't cool, though, was what Daryll apparently did next. We subsequently heard that he had told Goolam that he wanted to pack his bags, as he was tired of this team … and, by the way, they were smoking marijuana in the physio's room a few nights ago.

Ja …

So, we got back to the hotel after the day's play, and The Shit had hit the fan. The team was asked to assemble in the team room, where we were told that management had been notified of a certain incident that had taken place in the physio's room, and would the guilty parties please stand up. Daryll had sold us out. Most of the guys knew we'd had a couple of spliffs – I don't know if Polly knew, as he was the captain, but the rest all knew.

But Daryll was the one who had squealed because he had had an altercation with Roger. He might only have wanted to get even with Roger, but the rest of us got nailed too. I was still on a suspended sentence from the match-fixing drama at the time, so I got fined R10 000. The other guys were fined five grand or thereabouts. All in all, one of the more expensive farts Roger had ever let rip.

Still, I look back on the whole pungent episode rather fondly. You know, 'when in Rome' … It was the only time I ever smoked weed; I've never needed to do it again. I had just thought, well, it's a one-off thing. We've won the series, so we might as well celebrate in true Caribbean style.

I don't have any regrets. But we were obviously all pissed off with Daryll, because if it hadn't been for him, nothing would have come of it.