as these guys think they are, without a consistent yorker they're going to get hit, and hit far. You have to have a banker ball in limited-overs cricket. It's weird – I mean, our guys practise yorkers for all they're worth in the nets, but they can't execute them well enough in a game.

Along with Rusty Theron, who I think has all the variations needed for the subcontinent, I think Wayne is the guy who can really do the business for us. Apart from the fact that he is a lefty, he has the potential to bowl a good variety of balls, including an in-swinging yorker-length ball. All the signs are there for Wayne to play a big part in Proteas cricket in the coming years – in all forms of the game.
