any of my girlfriends. I don't know why, but it's been going on for years. She always wants to find fault with the woman I'm seeing. Perhaps she thinks they're after my money.

I've told her, 'Mom, but I don't have money. What makes you think I've got all this money?' But she's never bought it. I'm financially well off, but I don't have millions in the bank, like the very wealthy. If I did, I wouldn't be playing the UK lottery as often as I do! I always spend a little money on the lottery when I'm there. I mean, why not? Fork out £6 a week for a few lottery tickets and, who knows, it could turn into a win of £6 million. It would be fantastic! Six million pounds is quite a lot of money. Tax free. Nice.

So ja, my mom wasn't exactly over the moon about the news of my engagement, but my dad, on the other hand, was completely overwhelmed. So that was all good.

Tenielle and I were engaged for over a year and I think she definitely wanted kids, so I felt a bit of pressure from her. I guess I was just going through what every man goes through, contemplating whether or not he's ready to take the big step. I thought to myself, 'If you don't know by now, you'll never know.' But I genuinely wanted to get married. And to be truthful, out of all the women I'd dated, I really thought Tenielle was the one.

We had a very strong physical bond between us – it's there even now when I see her, and I don't think it will ever go away. I am a very affectionate person and we were very affectionate with each other. I'd look at how some of the other guys in the team treated their wives or girlfriends and it appeared odd to me, as they never seemed to show their partners much affection. Perhaps they were embarrassed or shy, but for me, it didn't matter. Even in public I was always helluva affectionate.

But whether or not I was going to be faithful to Tenielle was another story, and it was an issue that preyed on my mind. As a professional sportsman, a lot of temptations come your way and, obviously, you know, it fuels the fire when you're drinking a lot as well. Alcohol definitely lowers your moral barometer.

Despite my misgivings, Tenielle and I decided to get married on the island of St Kitts and Nevis in the West Indies. After playing the 2007 World Cup on the island and hitting six sixes in a row off an unfortunate Dutchman, the Minister of Sport for St Kitts and Nevis – a gentleman by