wanted to hurt me back, and the way to do that was to smack me in the wallet.

Fortunately I have good lawyers and they handled the case on my behalf. All I had to do was sign a few papers. I ended up paying off Tenielle's new car and giving her about R550 000 in cash. She took some pieces of furniture from the house, but the house itself remained in my name. Basically she didn't get anywhere close to what she thought she would.

The divorce did knock me a little financially – 550K is 550K – but thanks to tournaments like the IPL, I would survive.

Tenielle was one of the two people who came to see me when I was in rehab, but today I know we're finished. I can't really say I'll never get married again – I think, ultimately, I'd like to tie the knot one day. Perhaps after I've been on the road for 20-odd years, which will be in another five years, then I'll think about it. If this means that I stay single until then, so be it. I'm sure my life will take on a whole new direction once I've finished playing cricket. I've just bought a new house in Camps Bay that I'm renovating, so maybe that is the beginning of the process.

It is something I look forward to.
