

Figure 2.18 Minar of Qasimabad, Sistan. From Tate 1912–1912: opp. p. 22.

at times tightly wound double lines on Ghur's buildings (Figure 2.20) – often framing or meandering among flush, deeply carved or stamped floral motifs – echo the widespread framing technique of Sasanian stucco decoration: relevant examples come from both the Sasanian east at Tepe Hissar (Damghan, fifth–sixth century CE) (Figure 2.21), as well as the west at Nizamabad (south of Tabriz) (Figure 2.22).[55] Moreover, the stylized, high-relief rendition of floral elements characterizing the known Sasanian stucco corpus forms an intriguing continuum with the fleshily sculpted floral whorls on some of Ghur's structures (Figures 2.15, 2.16, 2.20, 2.23).