Acknowledgments

The completion of any project is possible only because of the belief, supportiveness, and generosity of many. And an uncommon one such as this – involving more than one book – will, I am afraid, require trespassing on the aforementioned qualities long after the acknowledgments for this book are penned and in print. It is no exaggeration to say that the whole endeavor would not have reached this sar manzil without the unstinting contributions of others. I humbly and gratefully acknowledge the entities that have eased the way thus far, and the individuals who have embarked on this journey with me.

The project received its first boost with an American Institute for Indian Studies Senior Fellowship for completion of in-depth architectural documentation in north India (first begun during doctoral fieldwork throughout India and Pakistan). Thereafter, fellowships from the American Philosophical Society and the UC Office of the President supported fieldwork in Iran and Afghanistan. Iranian warmth and hospitality are world-renowned for good reason; I am particularly grateful to Professor Javad Abbasi (Firdausi University) for sharing his time, knowledge, and conversation. In Afghanistan, neither work nor the trip itself would have been possible without the guidance and support of Praveen Kumar KG of the Indian Embassy in Kabul; Dr. Daud Shah Saba, then Governor of Herat Province; Mr. Tarachand, Consul General of India in Herat; and Phillipe Marquis of the Délégation Archéologique Française en Afghanistan.

After foraging for and gathering vast amounts of data, its collation and composition into a narrative necessarily calls for cloistering, preferably with responsive interlocutors who help one feel less alone (and less crazy). Fellowships at the Getty Research Institute (GRI; 2017–18) and at the National Humanities Center (NHC; 2019) both provided the perfect balance of solitude for writing and meaningful conversations with wonderfully smart people. I cannot thank the GRI and the NHC enough; these opportunities renewed my own faith in the project and were instrumental in completing the book manuscript of this first "installment."

Most recently (April 2020), the Dean's Office of the School of Humanities at the University of California, Irvine (UCI) provided the unique opportunity of a workshop on the manuscript prior to its
