

Figure 3.19 Barfak II, a.k.a. "Danestama," c. 80 km northeast of Bamiyan: plan. From Le Berre 1970: 47.

reuse and reoccupation at the site, although no apparent new construction can thus far be attributed specifically to Shansabani presence in the area during the later twelfth century.[72] Such a refinement of architectural chronology emerges from comparison of the Ghulghula remains with those of Sarkhushak.

Like Shahr-i Zuhak (see above), Ghulghula was also constructed during pre-Islamic centuries, but Zuhak exhibited comparatively little evidence of later reoccupation vis-à-vis Ghulghula: for example, extremely few Islamic-period glazed wares emerged from Zuhak, while Ghulghula's ceramic corpus was dominated by a truly impressive quantity and variety of Islamic-period painted glazed wares with vegetal, geometric, and calligraphic or pseudo-calligraphic decoration, as well as fine glazed wares