

Figure 3.22 Barfak II/"Danestama," detail of stucco revetment in mihrab. From Le Berre 1970: pl. IV.

Bazar.[78] It could be proposed, then, that the site overall experienced at least two documentable phases of *re*occupation: Whatever pre-Islamic fabric remained at the site was certainly visited by later builders of palatial structures, probably during the Ghaznavid command of the Bamiyan region from the end of the tenth through early twelfth centuries. With the establishment of a Shansabani branch at Bamiyan c. 1150 CE, the Ghaznavid palatial remains could have been reoccupied, obviating the need for new construction (as we will see in Ghazna itself: cf. Chapter 4).