cultural centers" (ibid., 131ff.). Cf. also Allegranzi 2015: 24–27. For a summary of the extensive patronage of poetry throughout the length of the Ghaznavid dynasty, see Allegranzi 2019a, vol. I: 23–31. See also Appendix, Afghanistan V and VI.

57. For Egypt and the Mediterranean, see, e.g., RCEA, vol. 5 (1934) Nos. 1838, 1879, 1917, 1931, 1938, 1950. In the eastern Islamic lands, two tomb towers at Kharraqan dating to the late eleventh century CE carry Q. LIX: 21–24 (Blair 1992: 9, 134, 172). According to Dodd and Khairallah (1981: II:130–131), whose work concentrated on architecture rather than smaller elements (e.g., epitaphs), parts of this verse series was first documented in Córdoba's jami dating to AH 354/965 CE, and thereafter principally in India, beginning with Delhi's Qutb mosque in AH 587/1191–1192 CE and continuing through the fifteenth century (see Volume II).
58. In Blair's (1992) compilation of inscriptions from greater Iran and Transoxiana of the ninth through early twelfth centuries, no takbir was documented, and only one Hadith – on a mihrab from Iskodar, dated to AH 400/1010 CE. Cf. Blair 1992: 10, 78; also Blair 1998: 69. At variance with Blair, Hillenbrand (2012: 19) claimed that Hadiths "often appear[ed] in building inscriptions." In fact, Hadith may have gone unrecorded in the RCEA because, unlike Qur'anic inscriptions, Hadith were not as often accompanied by historical data (date of foundation, patron, etc.) – the collection of which was the true aim of the monumental RCEA. See also supra in notes.
59. For Shi'a presence in Khurasan, cf. Bulliet 1972: 14–15; Bosworth 1973: 194–200; Bosworth 2012c. It is also noteworthy that 'Ali's name was repeated (in Kufic) on the eastern pier of the madrasa's northern entrance, adjacent to the Hadith under discussion (cf. Casimir and Glatzer 1971: fig.12; Najimi 2015: 167). Moreover, in the epigraphic programs of the known Shansabani-patronized structures throughout modern Afghanistan and Pakistan, 'Ali was included in invocations of the Rightly Guided Caliphs of early Islam, e.g., in the stucco medallions decorating the mihrab of Chisht's northeastern structure, and in similar brick medallions on the mihrab of the ribat of 'Ali ibn Karmakh near Multan. For Chisht, see Allegranzi 2019b (forthcoming); for the Multan ribat, see Edwards 1991: 92; Edwards 2015: 110–133, 201–210; and Chapter 6. See also Appendix, Afghanistan III: 7b; and Pakistan I: 7.
60. Cf. at: https://sunnah.com/bukhari/81, or Sahih al-Bukhari 6416, Book 81 (print Vol. 8, Book 76, Hadith 425). See also Melchert 2012; and Appendix, Afghanistan IV: 9.
61. Pinder-Wilson 2001: 164ff.; cf. also Appendix, Afghanistan VI. Prior occurrences of Surat al-Fath's opening verses occurred at Qasr Kharana, Jordan (Q. XLVIII: 2) in AH 92/710 CE, and in the cupola of Cairo's al-Juyushi Mosque (Q. XLVIII: 1–5) in AH 478(?)/1085(?) CE. Farther east in the Iranian world, the verses (Q. XLVIII: 1–5) appeared in the Isfahan oasis' Barsiyan mosque. Cf. Godard and Smith 1937: 40–41; Dodd and Khairallah 1981: II: 118–120; and supra in notes.
62. The minar also survived the destruction left in the path of the Mongol contingent in pursuit of the Khwarazm-shah Jalal al-Din Mingburnu in the 1220s,