

Figure 5.28 Lashkari Bazar, ruins, general view: Central Palace, Pigeon House, and North Palace, seen from South Palace site looking north along Helmand River. © Photograph Josephine Powell c. 1960. Harvard Fine Arts Library, Special Collections.

ease with which nomadic and transhumant groups conceptually and physically understood large swaths of contiguous cultural geographies, changing topographies, and varying climates; and their ability to traverse these expanses efficiently and en masse, were all acquired skills that were extremely valuable in following the geo-historical momentum of their empire-building Yamini predecessors.[54] And these conceptual skills would be not only useful but fundamental for the sustenance of the Shansabanis of Ghazna, as explored further in the next chapter.

Notes

1. Cf. Durand-Guédy 2013b: 328–335; Peacock 2015: 143, 166–172; see also Chapter 3.