the rank-and-file has attenuated as a result. Meanwhile, Lashkar remains able to expand its already potent capabilities, penetrating society through social outreach while simultaneously increasing its integration with the militant nexus that now threatens Pakistan. ‘Jihad is like the flow of water,’ to quote one member of the security services.[11] Unless something changes, arresting this tide will only grow more difficult with time.