65. Ahmed Rashid, ‘Pakistan: Trouble Ahead, Trouble Behind,’ Current History 95, no. 600 (Apr. 1996). Jalal, Partisans of Allah, p. 278.
66. LeJ ostensibly split from the SSP in 1995–1996 when the SSP appeared to be moderating, but in reality the two remained closely associated. For more on the SSP and LeJ split, see: Abou Zahab, ‘The Regional Dimension of Sectarian Conflicts in Pakistan,’ pp. 119–120.
67. Mariam Abou Zahab, ‘Salafism in Pakistan: The Ahl-e Hadith Movement,’ in Global Salafism, p. 127. See also: Metcalf, Islamic Revival in British India, pp. 268–296.
68. Dietrich Reetz, Islam in the Public Sphere: Religious Groups in India 1900–1947 (Delhi: Oxford University Press, 2006), p. 92. Jalal, Partisans of Allah, p. 65. Abou Zahab, ‘Salafism in Pakistan,’ p. 127. Regarding the corruption or pure Sunni Islalm, see also: Quintan Wiktorowicz, ‘A Genealogy of Radical Islam,’ Studies in Conflict and Terrorism 28, no. 2 (Mar.–Apr. 2005).
69. Roel Meijer, ‘Introduction,’ in Global Salafism, p. 3.
70. Wiktorowicz, ‘The New Global Threat.’
71. Abou Zahab, ‘Salafism in Pakistan,’ p. 127. See also: Reetz, Islam in the Public Sphere, p. 92, 100.
72. Wahhabis themselves often reject the term because it suggests they follow Muhammad Ibn Abd-al-Wahhab, a person, rather than God. They instead use the term ‘Salafi.’
73. Abou Zahab, ‘Salafism in Pakistan,’ p. 129.
74. Regarding the Ahl-e-Hadith profession of loyalty to the Raj, see: Jalal, Partisans of Allah, p. 145. Regarding the maintenance of ties, see: Reetz, Islam in the Public Sphere, p. 73.
75. Jalal, Partisans of Allah, p. 147.
76. Sayyid Ahmad Khan, ‘Review on Dr. Hunter’s Indian Musalmans: Are They Bound in Conscience to Rebel Against the Queen,’ in Hafeez Malik (ed.), Political Profile of Sir Sayyid Ahmad Khan: A Dictionary Record (Islamabad: Institute of Islamic History, Culture and Civilization, 1982), p. 272.
77. Jalal, Partisans of Allah, p. 146.
78. Ibid., p. 147.
79. Abou Zahab, ‘Salafism in Pakistan,’ p. 128.