25. Author interview with former Kashmiri journalist, name withheld, Jan. 2009 in India. The term 'Kashmiri group' is often used for outfits like Harkat-ul-Mujahideen and Lashkar-e-Taiba because they fought in Kashmir, but this is a misnomer. Kashmiris used the term 'guest mujahideen' or 'foreign fighters' to refer to their members because these groups were not indigenous to Kashmir.
26. These were Pakistani outfits, but in the years immediately following the fall of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan they often included foreign jihadis from outside of South Asia who initially traveled to the region to fight against the Soviets in Afghanistan.
