(a) 'Having visited the Indian mission in Zahedan, Iran, I can assure you they are not issuing visas as the main activity.
(b) India had run operations from its mission in Mazar (through which it supported the Northern Alliance) and it was likely doing so from the other consulates it had reopened in Jalalabad and Qandahar along the border.
(c) Indian officials had told me privately that they are pumping money into Baluchistan.
(d) Kabul had encouraged India to engage in provocative activities such as using the Border Roads Organisation to build sensitive parts of the Ring Road and use the Indo-Tibetan police force for security.
(e) It was also building schools on a sensitive part of the border in Kunar–across from Bajaur' (Foreign Affairs, 2009).

People readily accept any accusation of hostility against India. It was a common myth, although unconfirmed, that Indians and Gorkhas were found among the dead fighting on the Taliban side in Swat against the Pakistani security forces. It was revealed when they were found uncircumcised (Times Online, 2009). These sorts of unfounded stories worked in favour of the militants who actually deserved to be exposed before the public. Blaming India had always been a good excuse to get away with unresolved violent incidents. However, it is a fact that in August 2008, three arrested terrorists belonging to TTP's Qari Hussain, known as 'Ustad-e-Fedayeen' (Mentor of suicide bombers) (Dawn, 2009), revealed that he received Rs 680 million from 'an enemy country' (India).[7]

The Prime Minister of Pakistan Yousuf Reza Gillani handed over a dossier containing proofs of India's involvement in subversive activities in Pakistan to Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh during his meeting at Sharm el-Sheikh in Egypt in July 2009 (Dawn, 2009). The contents of the dossier were not disclosed.

Interior Minister Rehman Malik also stated that the security forces recovered a heavy amount of Indian-made weaponry from Bara area (KP). He claimed that India was involved in terror incidents in Pakistan and the evidence of Indian involvement in destabilising Pakistan had been handed over to the Foreign Office in Islamabad. He added that confiscation of Indian-made arms from Khyber Agency was one of the evidences of Indian involvement in Pakistan (The News International, 2009).
