11. Many Americans also questioned, 'Who was Osama bin Laden, and what did he want? How could his bedraggled fighters carry out so devastating an attack? Why was America the target of the killers' rage? Is the enemy a small band of killers, a larger group of radicals, or even the entire Islamic world itself? Is this a war to the death, threatening everything the United States (or civilisation) holds dear? And, most importantly, what can be done to counter these deadly foes? These questions provoked a heated debate. Experts disputed both the size and the appeal of Al Qaeda, making it unclear whether it is a small fringe movement or a cohesive network.'

4. Each tribal agency of FATA is administered by a political agent, assisted by a number of assistant political agents, tehsildars (administrative head of a tehsil) and naib tehsildars (deputy tehsildar), as well as members from various local police (khassadars) and security forces (levies, scouts). As part of his administrative functions, the political agent oversees the working of line departments and service providers. He is responsible for handling inter-tribal disputes over boundaries or the use of natural resources and for regulating the trade in natural resources with other agencies of the settled areas.

   The political agent plays a supervisory role for development projects and chairs an agency development sub-committee, comprising various government officials, to recommend proposals and approve development projects. He also serves as project coordinator for rural development schemes. Available at
