> believe this to be the only way to solve the problem of bread for Muslims as well as to secure a peaceful India. If such a thing is impossible in India the only other alternative is a civil war which as a matter of fact has been going on for some time in the shape of Hindu-Muslim riots.

One can raise a question that Muhammad Ali Jinnah might not have agreed with the suggestions and views of Iqbal. In fact, Muhammad Ali Jinnah while paying tribute to Iqbal on his death stated that 'If I am given a chance to choose between the work of Iqbal and a future Islamic state, I will choose Iqbal's work.' When the correspondence from Iqbal to Jinnah was published in book form in 1942, Jinnah wrote the foreword, in which he said:

> I think these letters are of very great historical importance, particularly those which explain his views in clear and unambiguous terms on the political future of Muslim India. His views were substantially in consonance with my own and had finally led me to the same conclusion as a result of careful examination and study of the constitutional problems facing India and found expression in due course in the united will of the Muslim India as adumbrated in the Lahore resolution of the All India Muslim League, popularly known as the 'Pakistan Resolution' passed on March 23, 1940 (Dawn, 2011).

Muhammad Ali Jinnah was a pragmatic leader who knew that Pakistan was going to be the homeland of millions of Muslims who would expect the introduction of Islamic rules to regulate their lives and systems. In fact, it happened as Pakistan became the first country created as a homeland for Muslims. Therefore, early in its campaign, Jinnah let the religious elements in the Muslim League make use of religious sentiments and emotions during the struggle for the creation of Pakistan (Riedel, 2013). The popular slogans chanted during the struggle, 'Muslim hai to Muslim League mein aa' (If you are a Muslim, join Muslim League) and 'Pakistan ka Matlab Kya- La Ilaha Illallah' (What is the meaning of Pakistan – There is no God but Allah), energised the majority of Muslims to favour Pakistan with religious fervour. The slogan 'Pakistan ka matlab kya-La Ilaha Illallah' was raised
