involvement in the said attacks. Of these men, the most important was Zaki-ur-Rehman Lakhvi, in charge of JuD's northern areas, who remained in Adiala Jail, Rawalpindi from 2009 to 2015.

India wanted Pakistan to pay more attention and give higher priority to LeT/JuD than Al Qaeda and TTP. However, Pakistan's priority was obviously to suppress important groups like Al Qaeda and TTP. Naturally, they were seen as the threat requiring more immediate attention with regards to Pakistan's security. Therefore, India's unidimensional focus on LeT/JuD could not convince Pakistan to change its priority (Sajjad, Hafeez & Firdous, 2010).

Moreover, Pakistan urged India to provide credible evidence against JuD and its chief, which could stand in a trial. The Indian dossier always fell short of meeting this requirement. Interestingly, Husain Haqqani, former ambassador of Pakistan to the US, who is almost blacklisted in Pakistan for allegedly facilitating the Americans against Pakistan's interests and for adopting pro-India policy, tweeted in the beginning of 2018 that Pakistan and the intelligence community must discuss evidence against Hafiz Saeed. As with the Lockerbie case, there can be an international trial over the Mumbai attacks if India provides evidence against Hafiz Saeed. Pakistani Prime Minister Shahid Khaqan Abbasi pointed out that the Pakistan Judiciary cannot give a verdict without evidence.

UNITED NATIONS BAN ON JAMAAT-UD-DAWA/LeT

A UN Security Council declared that Jamaat-ud-Dawa was a front for the Pakistani militant group Lashkar-e-Taiba and subject to UN sanctions on terrorist organisations. It also approved the designation of four suspected plotters of the Mumbai attacks as terrorists subject to sanctions. The UN identified all four individuals as leaders of Lashkar, including Zaki-ur-Rehman Lakhvi, Amir of JuD, northern areas of Pakistan and the alleged mastermind of the Mumbai siege. The others were Hafiz Mohammed Saeed, the leader of JuD; Haji Muhammad Ashraf, JuD's Chief of finance and Mahmoud Mohammad Ahmed Bahaziq, a Saudi financier of JuD. Among the sanctions imposed on the group and the four individuals by the Security Council, including Al Qaeda and Taliban Sanctions Committee were an asset freeze, travel ban and arms embargo on the individuals. Since 2005, the Sanctions Committee – a powerful tool of the UN's powerhouse 15-nation
